COMMUNITY VOLUNTEERS

MEET IAN AND TASHA, COMMUNITY VOLUNTEERS.

Ian and Tasha are volunteers at the local soup kitchen. Ian is a chef by trade and Tasha volunteers with several organizations throughout the community that serve those in need.

They have learned that human trafficking is often the end result of a story that started much earlier for individuals who suffered compounding vulnerabilities, such as abuse or neglect, homelessness, or poverty. Tasha recognizes that many of the organizations she volunteers with serve these populations. She not only wants to make clients aware of the dangers, lures, and tactics of those who would exploit them, but also wants to understand more about how these organizations can engage as well.

Tasha arranges for local organizations and agencies to come in once a week to provide presentations during meal times. This allows for the information to be shared with those who may benefit from the services available, but may not know they exist.

One of the presentations she schedules on a monthly basis is the local anti-trafficking coalition. Tasha wants to equip as many of the individuals they serve as possible with information about the tactics traffickers use and how they can keep themselves and their families safe. To ensure that everyone has access to help if it is ever needed, she passes out wallet cards and brochures that have hotline and emergency information. She also makes sure the poster with the number for reporting activity or seeking assistance is posted in each bathroom and hallway.

Tasha also wants to ensure that all staff and volunteers receive training on how to identify and report human trafficking. It is very likely and possible that a trafficker may frequent a soup kitchen or homeless shelter – this may be because he has a victim with him (or her) or because he is looking to recruit new victims. Tasha works with the local Task Force to learn how they can be helpful and how to properly report so that the information gets to the proper authorities for a response.

Tasha and Ian both are engaging right where they are, using their talents and network to make a difference on behalf of those in need.

YOU CAN TOO!

Ian learned that serving vulnerable populations is essential to preventing human trafficking from occurring in the first place. Now, he volunteers his culinary skills to the kitchen's efforts and is offering coordinating apprenticeship opportunities for survivors with his network. Ian also builds relationships with local suppliers and farmers markets to coordinate donations of food items to the soup kitchen, as well as local schools who send home food on the weekends to families struggling with hunger.

RESOURCES FOR YOU

Human trafficking often occurs in the United States by some mode of transportation – on the roadways in a city or between states, on trains, at bus stations, and by air travel. Individuals who travel often can have key roles in identifying victims in need and equipping law enforcement with the important details needed to start an investigation or build a case.

As a business professional, you can make a big difference with simple adjustments to what you are already doing! Consider the following:

- Take the Learn How to End Human Trafficking series from Justice U™ to discover what human trafficking is, important issues surrounding human trafficking, how to recognize it and report it safely, what an effective community-wide strategy looks like, how to shape your own role to end human trafficking—and more. Sign-up today at learnwithjusticeu.com/learnhowseries.
- Program the National Human Trafficking Hotline (888-373-7888) into your personal and work mobile devices, and bookmark humantraffickinghotline.org so that you can quickly and anonymously report any suspicious activity you see on the roadways, rest stops, truck stops, train stations, bus stations, airport, or elsewhere in your travels.
- Understand how homelessness intersects with human trafficking, particularly for children and youth (covenanthouse.org/homeless-issues).
- Coordinate with other service providers in your community to discuss what needs and challenges vulnerable populations in your area face. Consider mapping the efforts to identify where services are – and are not – available.
- Establish a protocol for what happens when human trafficking is suspected. Ask local law enforcement or your community's anti-trafficking Task Force where to begin.
- Train all outreach teams, employees, and volunteers how to identify trafficking and what your organization's and community's protocol is for addressing suspicions or reports.
- Invite service providers to present on what human trafficking looks like locally and what resources are available, on topics including safety, empowerment, domestic violence, and drug addictions.

YOU ARE UNIQUELY POSITIONED TO MAKE A DIFFERENCE.
